Parent Involvement Scale Score Results

The remaining items on the Parent Involvement survey form a scale that reflects some of the ways in which schools facilitate parent involvement. Across districts and years of survey administration, parents tend to agree with some survey items more than others. Items with higher parent agreement likely reflect ways of facilitating parent involvement that are easier for schools to achieve. The next page lists the items in order of parents' overall agreement: items at the top are those that parents tend to agree with most, while items at the bottom are those that parents tend to agree with least.

Parents vary in the extent to which they perceive that their school facilitated involvement. These differences are reflected in parents' individual scale scores. Higher scores indicate greater agreement with the items; the higher the scores, the higher the district's parent involvement scale score.

To assist the translation of scores into improvement actions, parents can be grouped into five levels based on their agreement with survey items. The legend below describes how parents in each score level responded to the survey items and where schools might focus their improvement efforts:

Level 0	Parents at this score level disagreed that their school facilitated parent involvement as expressed in any of the items. Focus on promoting parents' agreement with Level 1 items.
Level 1	Parents at this score level expressed some agreement with Level 1 items. Focus on improving parents' agreement on Level 1 items and achieving agreement on Level 2 items.
Level 2	Parents at this score level expressed some agreement with Level 2 items. Focus on improving parents' agreement on Level 2 items and achieving agreement on Level 3 items.
Level 3	Parents at this score level expressed some agreement with the Level 3 item. Focus on improving parents' agreement on Level 3 .
Level 4	Parents at this score level agreed that their school facilitated parent involvement as expressed in all of the items. Focus maintaining and strengthening parents' agreement with all items, especially those at Level 3 .
